

Definitions of the Well-Being Portfolio

A Tool for Regional Leaders Ready to Create a Balanced and Impactful Set of Policies, Programs, and Practices to Transform Well-Being

Definitions of a Well-Being Portfolio

The Portfolio Imperative

Sustaining well-being requires contributions from virtually every quarter of your region's health ecosystem, if only to contend with the sheer variety of massively entangled threats and opportunities. Having a portfolio of interventions is a must. All regions, including yours, already have a portfolio of interventions in play—whether acknowledged or not. Your portfolio is enshrined in the way resources flow and is animated by prevailing ideas about what ought to be done, by whom, with whom, for whom, and in what amounts. The question is: what portfolio of vital conditions and urgent services should make up much of the investment (of time, money, and other resources) to yield better results over time?

Negotiating Priorities

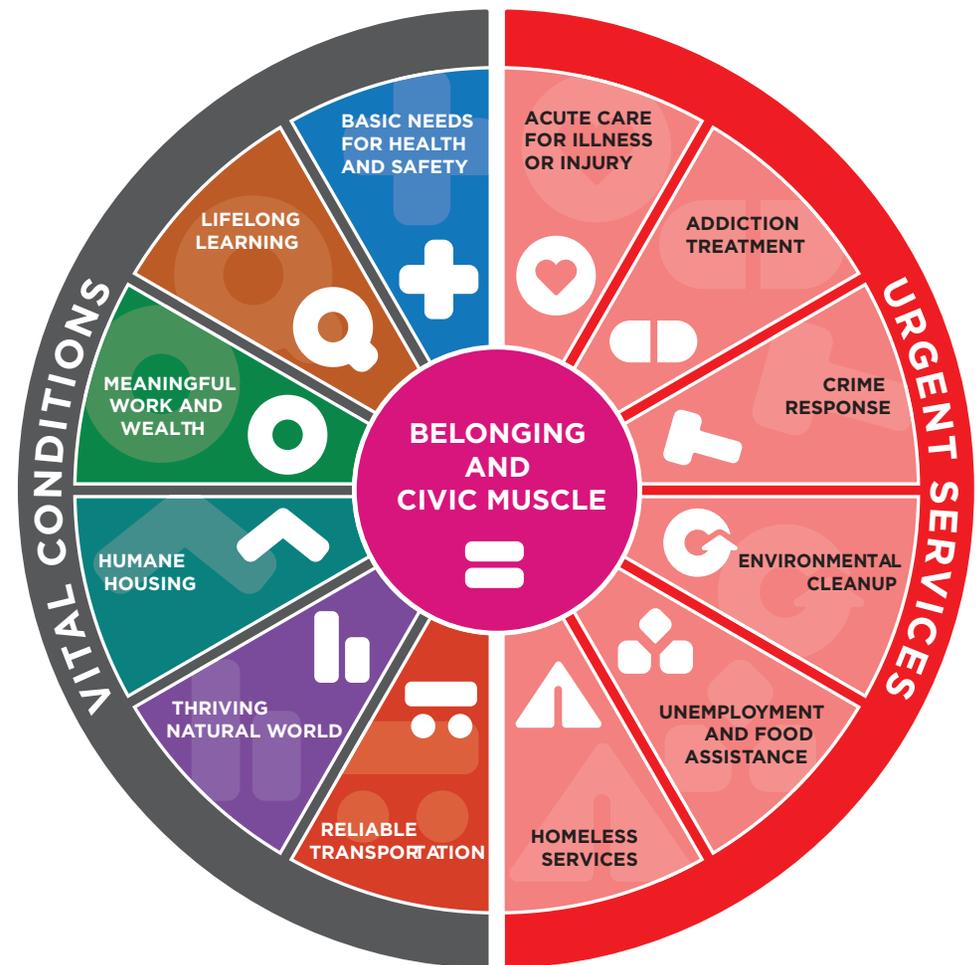

Even if stakeholders in your region agree on common ends, they may disagree—sometimes forcefully—about the best means. This creates a need to negotiate priorities.

System stewards with a wide-angle view of the whole ecosystem know that a sound portfolio of interventions must maintain a delicate mix of investments to assure vital conditions, to address urgent needs, as well as to strengthen belonging and civic muscle. This exercise will help you begin to think through the many potential combinations that could make up the portfolio of interventions that will achieve a shared vision for your region, including the positive and negative consequences that could be realized from each.

Below is summary of potential strategy options, for potential inclusion in a Well-Being Portfolio.
